

Course Evaluation: Statistics 'B'

During the entire course I was ▼ entertained, and not for a single moment was I bored. This course taught me ▼ many things I did not know. We studied almost exclusively subjects that never ▼ were encountered earlier, but always interested me or generally were ▼ thought-provoking. None of the sessions were superfluous; all the sessions were ▼ interesting. The teaching methods were such a clever way to cause us to ▼ understand the material well and not to waste our valuable time ▼ on nonsense; rather, focusing on what we didn't understand so much. I regret that I decided ▼ not to turn in all the course assignments – it made it harder to take this course. But ▼ what does it matter, how difficult it is -- if this course is interesting ▼ and enjoyable? If I didn't achieve a grade of "100," it means that I am simply ▼ in error on the question about taking cookies out of a jar. I made a great big mistake ▼ and I was reminded of that several times when I attended the first sessions. ▼ I was rather tense in the exam and got confused.
There's no apparent connection ▼ between the stupid mistake I made on the exam, and to daily reality, and so the course was ▼ not that hard; nor does it seem to me to be quite stupid. Too bad that ▼ the course has ended, for this particular course is ▼ so interesting. I know it is mandatory for my degree. Otherwise, ▼ I would choose it as an option. It's out of the question that I never would have taken it. ▼ (Fold on the dotted line.)

(Thanks and deep appreciation to Aryeh Malkin for the bulk of the translation)